

HOUSE ON THE BLUFFS

House on the Bluffs overlooks the Scarborough Bluffs in Toronto. The property was the client's childhood home, which was appropriated to create a new residence. The foundation of the childhood home was reused to support the new structure, blending old and new and signifying the layers of the owner's life.

Layers also appear in House on the Bluffs' façade. A screen of vertical channel glass covers the home's simple stucco architecture, allowing natural light to enter and keeping visibility from the outside to a minimum. The façade is also wrapped in Ontario Algonquin limestone, outlining the front wall and recessed entrance. The rear of the home is a two-storey wall of glass that affords a breathtaking view of Lake Ontario.

House on the Bluffs' interior is configured to break up its volumetric architecture. The master bedroom has cantilevers that jut out over the dining room below. A linear skylight runs the length of the house, where natural light functions to divide up space. Charcoal-coloured fibre cement panels offer distinction to the structure both inside and outside the home.
